How to read/interpret your bank statement?

Mashreq Al Islami bank statements contain the following information.

Personal Information: Customer ID and name is displayed on the 1st page of the statement

Statement Period: This is the first and last date of the period for which transactions are shown in the statement. It is in DD/MM/YYYY format.

Opening Balance: This is the amount you had in your account during the beginning of the statement period.

Closing Balance: This is the amount in your account when the statement period ends.

Monthly Average Balance: It is calculated by adding together each daily closing account balance through the month. The bank then divides the sum of the daily account balances by the number of days in the month.

Deposits: This portion of the statement shows the transactions where you put funds into your account. This can include direct deposit from your employer, cashed checks, wire transfers, money you transferred from other banks.

Withdrawals: This portion of the statement shows the transactions where you withdrew funds from your account. This can include both online transfers, like a payment to your credit card, and transactions that occurred with your debit card.

Profit: If you earned profit on your Saving accounts during the period, the bank statement will show how much you earned. If you have multiple saving accounts, the statement will show total profit for each account.

Fees: This portion reveals the exact fees you paid during the statement period. That can include fees for returned checks, ATM withdrawals, and a monthly maintenance fee. If you went abroad and used your debit card, you may have been charged a foreign transaction fee or ATM withdrawal fee.
